New Theatre Company to Tell Story of Leo Frank

Ground Floor Theatre, Central Texas' newest theatre company, will present a concert version of the hit musical "Parade" December 3 through 5. "Parade," a book by Alfred Uhry and music and lyrics by Jason Robert Brown, tells the true story of Leo Frank.

Frank, a Brooklyn-raised Jewish man living in Atlanta, was wrongfully convicted in 1913 of murdering his 13 year old employee, Mary Phagan. Because Frank's trial was replete with faulty testimony and lacked clear evidence, Georgia's governor eventually commuted his sentence from death to life imprisonment.

Despite the ruling, an unruly mob lynched Frank in Marietta, Georgia. The momentous case drew national attention to anti-Semitism and was pivotal to the founding of the Anti-Defamation League.

Lisa Scheps, Ground Floor Theatre artistic co-director and founder, views the script as an ideal first project for the theatre company, whose mission is to present work by and for underrepresented communities. 'Parade' addresses not only anti-Semitism, but also discrimination in a broader spectrum, including racism, ageism and sexism.

"Parade' is such an impactful story. It asks many more questions than it answers, which is key to powerful art. Much like the script, the score is also incredibly complex and beautiful," Scheps said.

"We're proud to be able to present 'Parade' as our inaugural production, and to also have the support of Austin's Anti-Defamation League."

Ground Floor Theatre will present "Parade" December 3 through 5 at 8 p.m., with a Saturday matinee at 2 p.m.

Ground Floor Theatre is located at 979 Springdale Road in Austin, at the corner of Springdale and Airport Boulevard.
